

EVENING MENU

Caucasian-inspired · European-refined · shaped by fire

A cuisine between the Caucasus and Europe

Tamare grew out of the idea of not simply copying the depth of Caucasian cuisine, but retelling it: with respect for old flavours, with fire, spices, herbs, walnuts, pomegranate, acidity and slowly built sauces – yet with the clarity of a modern European restaurant kitchen.

The name Tamare recalls a historic figure and an era in which the Caucasus connected cultures, trade routes and tastes. That is exactly where our direction comes from: not loud, not folkloristic, but warm, precise and with a signature of its own.

The inspiration comes from many years of cooking experience, from travels, from kitchens in which craft, timing and product quality matter more than loud effects. We take familiar dishes and give them more precision: cleaner stocks, better textures, stronger roasted aromas, finer sauces and plating that never hides the taste.

Our lava stone grill is at the centre of it all. It brings heat, smoke and depth to meat, fish and vegetables. Khinkali, braised dishes and small plates to share tell the other side of the story: warmth, hospitality and the joy of eating together.

Tamare is not a museum of tradition. It is our interpretation of a Caucasian-inspired cuisine in Düsseldorf – emotional, refined, approachable, and with the ambition to get better every month.
